In 2009, I fell in love. I wrote several unofficial scripts to communicate these feelings. After several months and 49,751 words, I completed four unofficial episodes of the Dollhouse. My laptop failed. I then proceeded to drive by car to Hollywood, California. My hope was to deliver the scripts. I ended up sleeping out of my car for a week. I showered at homeless shelters (Union Mission) and met other homeless members of the community. I tried to attend a charity event to deliver the scripts with flowers, but the event was canceled. After much discussion, my friends and family sadly convinced me to board a plane to Minnesota. Everything I have is now scattered across the country. My car is somewhere in Los Angeles. My laptop is broken. My books and CD's are in Nevada. None of that matters. What bothers me is that I still haven't gotten the scripts to the woman I wrote them for.
